Why This Matters For Legal Spend

- Legal spend work carries judgment, consistency, evidence, and risk.
- The larger value is not catching one billing issue. It is making the decision reusable.
- A resolved issue should become a guideline note, evidence note, reporting signal, or future reviewer memory.

Suggested Starting Path

- Start with Solo for one real workflow: reviewing an invoice against outside counsel guidelines.
- Move to Pro when Diana needs multiple matters, recurring exceptions, approval gates, trend reporting, audit notes, and institutional memory.

First Prompt To Try In Solo

@operator Set up a legal spend review agency for me.

I want it to help with invoice review, outside counsel guideline checks, rate and timekeeper issues, escalation notes, reporting summaries, and repeat issue tracking.

Start with one workflow: reviewing an invoice against billing guidelines.

Tell me what information you need, what steps the agency should follow, what it should produce, what needs human approval, and what should be saved for future review.

First Prompt To Try In Pro

@operator Set up a legal spend management system for a law firm.

Create separate agencies for Matter Spend, Invoice Review, Guidelines, Reporting, Risk + Proof, and Insights.

Show how invoice activity moves from intake, to review, to exception handling, to approval or adjustment, to reporting, to learning.

Keep human approval required for disputed decisions, client-sensitive issues, policy interpretation, and anything that affects legal, financial, or relationship risk.

Important Boundary

- AgencyOS should not replace Diana's judgment.
- It should organize facts, apply guidelines, spot repeat issues, preserve evidence, route exceptions, and make reporting easier.
- Human approval stays central for disputed invoice decisions, client-specific interpretations, policy exceptions, relationship issues, and final approvals.

One-line takeaway: AgencyOS Solo helps Diana improve one legal spend workflow. AgencyOS Pro helps the firm turn legal spend management into a coordinated, governed, repeatable operating system.
