Research Workstream

Goal

Understand the business model and identify where a successful youth sports organization could be manual, repetitive, or administratively overloaded.

Website-based findings

i9 Sports is positioned as a youth sports league provider focused on fun, age-appropriate participation, and team sportsmanship. The site highlights features such as no tryouts, all-skill levels welcome, one-day-per-week programming, and trained officials.

Operational implications

Those program features imply a heavy amount of scheduling, schedule communication, venue coordination, parent expectations management, and recurring seasonal execution. Any business with this model can become manual very quickly as volume grows.

Value lens

The right AgencyOS question is not 'can we replace sports operations.' It is 'where can manual coordination be turned into a repeatable operating system without removing the personal element of local coaching and family experience.'
